Customer Email Support Agent: Architecture

Aly Matar | PointStar Developer Intern assessment, Part 1

Trade-offs

Human review: every critical email is checked by a person before it is sent, so risky cases are safer. The cost is that the process is not fully automated and needs human time.

Knowledge base first: the agent answers only after confirming the KB has the answer. This avoids wrong or invented replies, but unusual questions are escalated more often.

Failure points

Wrong category: if the classifier is not confident, the email goes to a human agent instead of being answered automatically.

Missing or outdated FAQ: if the KB cannot support an answer, the agent does not guess. The email is escalated to a human.

Invented refund promise: refund replies may only use the approved policy. With no policy evidence, the email goes to a human. Every draft is also approved by a human before sending.